5. Research Interests (60-75 words)

My research interests span avian taxonomy and biogeography, freshwater biology, and their implications for conservation. I integrate genomic tools to investigate questions of avian diversity and biogeographic patterns across regions. I am equally passionate about community-based conservation and systematic conservation planning, recognizing that biodiversity protection requires both scientific context and meaningful local engagement. More recently, my work has extended into developing biodiversity credit frameworks for Southeast Asian ecosystems, bridging ecological research with emerging market-based tools to drive conservation outcomes
